

A History of College Community Schools 1953 - Present

The Iowa State Legislature started a series of laws beginning in 1947 to have the Iowa educational system reorganized. At this point in time, there were individual Township school districts in existence. In the geographical area that later became the College Community School District there were three townships involved in the discussion leading to reorganization: Fairfax, College and Putnam Townships.

- The Fairfax School housed Primary through 10th grade with students then paying tuition to go into Cedar Rapids for high school.
- College Township School had consolidated the one-room schools (Union, Lone Willow, Rose Hill, Center, Schaefer Heights, Prairie Ridge, Buresh, Belle Prairie and Konigsmark) into one building to be built south of Cedar Rapids (later to become Prairie Elementary and then Prairie Heights Elementary)
- Putnam Township schools consisted of several one-room schools (including Honey Grove, Center #3, Big Grove).

In the early 1950's, the Cedar Rapids School District sent a notification to the school board of the three townships and indicated that they would no longer accept tuition students from its neighboring school districts for high school. They would be willing, however, to merge those township schools into the Cedar Rapids School District. An election was held in the spring of 1953 to create a new school district instead of merging into the Cedar Rapids District.

The first elected school board members were Kenneth E. Stahle, Leo A. Modracek, Louis P. Dolezal, Milton Chadima and Glenn E. Selzer. The College Community School Board hired Sam Wiley, previously the Superintendent of the College Township Schools, to serve as the Superintendent of the newly formed district. Linn County Superintendent of Schools, Walter A Shupp, was instrumental in leading the formation of the College Community School District.

College Community District highlights include:
